

Arranging for services: What is a change of condition?

This term is used when an individual's health status or means for delivering care has been altered in some way. At times, this term denotes a period of illness, a progression in a disease, or an increase in the care or monitoring by a caregiver or care professional. A change of condition can also denote a reduction in services where an older adult stabilizes or recuperates to a point where a specific duty or chore may no longer be necessary.
